DETROIT, 6; WASHINGTON, 0. The Tigers added another victory to their string yesterday, when they simply romped away with the second game of the series with the Nationals.

Hughey's men got off well and were so active with the stick during the early innings that when it started to rain in the fourth the Nationals were so far behind that they attempted to delay the contest before the regulation five innings could be played. But these tactics availed them little, for when it commenced to pour Chicago, 2; Boston, 2. Umpire Egan called the game until the field was thoroughly drenched and then ordered that hostilities be resumed. After the intermission the diamond was a morass of mud, and so slippery was the ground that none of the players took any chances on the bases.

Tom Hughes, who did good work time on the rubber the Tigers hammered the ball for seven singles and a triple, which, with three bases on balls and an error tossed in, gave the visitors five

George Muliin held the Nationals safe at every stage. Up to the ninth inning the homers made only one clean hit off Philadelphia..... the homers made only one clean hit on Mullin, although they succeeded in beating out three infield grounders in that time.
